A FEATURE of much importance in connec tion with the present aspect of affairs i China, is suggested by the Shanghai News Letter, in the course of an able review of recent events. It is pointed out that whereas formerly the ill-feeling towards foreigners was confined to a few places and at them chiefly to the Mandarin classes there is, at the present time, a widespread enmity throughout the country. This can be the result only of long and careful fanning of a flame, and forms internal evidence the manner in which the anti-foreign faction has been gradually attaining an ascendancy It is lamontable under such circumstances to find, as recently noticed, that the leading journal in England persistently maintains there is no danger to foreigners in China, and advocate the continuance of the policy which has been the chief cause of the presen state of affairs. It is not very difficult to understand how these false views gain cur rency, though it is none the less lamentable to find them spreading, as their results cannot be otherwise than of the most disastrous nature. These views really emanate from that section of the Chinese officials, who though they secretly entertain a dislike to foreigners, are yet aware that it would be dangerous to oppose them, and consequently are not altogether insincere in their professions of a willingness to preserve friendly relations. Among this class are Prince Kung and other, leading members of the Foreign Board at Pekin. These officials would be glad, if possible, to preserve an entirely negative attitude. They would not willingly do anything that would prevoke active hostility against foreigners, as they are aware that such a course would be attendnegative point. There has conarguently been a large addition made to the missionary force, and a considerable number are on the way here, some of them destined for places where a foreigner can only appear at the neril of his life. Ultimately, there may be work enough, perhaps, for these new labourers, but it is the general testimony of those now in the field, at least throughout Central and Northern Chins, that they are utterly paralysed in their consed and native converts are exposed to trials that severely try their faith. It would seem, therefore to be a mere waste of energy to continus sending additional missions so long m the government strives in every way to binder the extension of foreign influence. Whatever course other powers may pursue, the American rovernment can do nothing towards forcing Christianity on the Chinese. We know that American misionaries themselves would be the first to depreente state aid," and that they ask only that degree of protection which every citizen may rightfully claim; they therefore are restrained from undertakings which are open to the subjects of Church and State governments, that is to say, of those countries which alum a protectorate over missipparies and their

hurn carbon, and make it units with oxygen in order to form carbonic acid, and in so doing we change the energy of position derived from the separat on of two substances having is great an attraction for each other as oxygen and carbon, into the energy of heat. In a leaf, on the other hand, these two strongly attractive substitutes are forced asunder, the powerful agent, which accomplishes this being the sun a mys. so that it is the energy of these rays which is transformed into the potential energy on onergy of position represented by the chemical separation of this oxygen and carbon. The carbon, or rather the woody fibre into which the carbon enters, is thus a source of potential floor of building lately econoised by Messre energy, and when made to combine again with Thos. Hunt & Co. Apply to exygon, either by direct combustion or otherwise, it will in the process give out a deal of energy. When we burn wood in our fires we convert this energy into heat, and when we cat vegetables we assimilate this energy into our systems, where it ultimately produces both heat and work. We are thus enabled to trace the energy of the sun's rays through every step of this most wonderful process: first of all: building up vegetable food, in the next place feeding the ox or sheep, and lastly through the shape of the very pression but essential joint of best or mutton entering into and sustaining these frames of ours. We are not, however, quite done yet with vegetable fibre, for that part of it which does enter into our frames may, notwithstanding, be converted into useful work. And has not Nature, as if anticipating the wants of our age, provided an almost limitless store of such fuel in the vast deposits of coal, by means of which so large a portion of the useful work of the world is done? In geological ages this coal was the fibre of aspecies of plant, and it has been stored up as if for the benefit of generations like the But there are other products of the sun's rays besides food and fuel. The miller who makes use of water-power or of wind power to grind his corn, the navigator who spreads his sail to catch the breeze are indebted to our luminary equally with the man who cate ment or who drives an engine. For it is owing to the sun's mys that water is carried up into the atmosphere to be again precipitated so as to form what is called a head of water, and it is also owing to the sun's bent that winds agitate the air. With the trivial exception of tidal curry, all the work done in the world is due to the sun, so that we must look to our luminary as the great source of all our energy.

Intimately linked as we are to the sun, it is natural to sak the question, Will the sun last for ever, or will be also die out? There is no apparent reason why the sum should form an exception to the fate of all fires, the only difference being one of size and time. It is larger and botter, and will last longer than the lamp of an hour, but it is nevertheless a lamp. The city. Apply to principle of degradation would appear to hold throughout, and if we regard not mere matter but useful energy, we are driven to contemplate the death of the universe. Who would live for ever even if he had the elixir of life! or who would purchase, if he might, the dreary privilege to preside at the end of all things—to be "twine in death" with the sun, and to fill up in his own experience the melacholy dream of The sun's eye had a sickly glare-The stars with age were wan, The skeletons of nations were Around that lonely man, Some died in war, the iron bunds

ETTERS, &c., ADDRESSED " LONDON " ONLY. Many persons are in the habit of addressing Letters, &c., for well-known Firms and Indi-viduals, to "London" only; but this practice not unfrequently occasions delay in such Letters ac. reaching their rightful owners. In all cases, however well the Firm or Individual for whom a letter is intended may be known, it is most essential, to ensure its correct and prompt delivery, that the streets in which they reside, and the number of the house, should form a part of the address. F. W. MITCHELL.
